CONFIDENCE OF THE PEOPLE.

The latest absurd assertion of the Government organ is, that the platform lately put forth by the Government party's national (?) candidates has the confidence of the people. Compared with the facts, it would be hard to determine what the Government organ means by "the people." It might be surmised that by "the people" the Government organ meant to designate the Third Estate, were it not for the fact that the policy of the King and his Ministers is diametrically opposed to the interests of the Third Estate. The Government organ cannot mean by "the people" the tax-payers, for, unfortunately, the bulk of the tax-payers have more of contempt for than confidence in the leaders of the King's opposition to the cause of the people. Admitting, then, for argument's sake, that the tax-payers who furnish the money to support a First Estate—to go to the wall when the people win—are in a minority, then who can the Government organ mean by "the people"—"the people" who have given their confidence to Mr. Hayselden and his three First Estate chums?

Perhaps the Government leaders are making the same mistake once made in France, when the Royalists of that unfortunate nation confounded "the people" with dependents upon the First Estate. In this day and age, after many bloody revolutions, it has been decided by the world's Third Estate that the tax-payers who support the "bubble of royalty" are "the people." But, alas! these are not "the people" who have given their confidence to the candidates of the Hawaiian First Estate. It is unfortunately too true that the Third Estate of Hawaii does not give its confidence to the First Estate of Hawaii. Such a state of affairs has often existed under monarchical government.

The Third Estate—the people who pay the taxes—cannot be fairly represented unless the capital and property upon which taxes are paid are represented. To assert that the Government has the confidence of "the people" of Hawaii, simply because it is backed by voters who do not pay for the "bubble of royalty," to the exclusion of those who do pay for the "bubble of royalty," but who, unfortunately for the country, are practically debarred from the privilege of the ballot, is to broadly assert the doctrine of might against right.

It would be well for the Government to remember, before it neglects the cause of the people too far, and plunges the nation further in debt to carry on its folly, that political equations are sometimes solved like mathematical equations, viz: by changing the form without altering the value—as far as the people are concerned. In this extreme, however, "the people" seldom have the confidence of the Government!

A Dangerous Counterfeit.

The most dangerous counterfeit of a United States coin is a $5 gold piece that is supposed to have been made through the rascality of some ex-employees in the New Orleans Mint. It was made with the genuine stamp. The outside is of gold and the inside of silver and platinum. There are hundreds of thousands of them in circulation.

SCENES AT A ROYAL DEATH-BED.

Human Nature the Same in Palaces as in Peasants' Cottages—Grief in Alfonso's Death Chamber.

When the Queen Christina and Isabella and the Royal family arrived at El Pardo, the physicians allowed only Christina to enter the death-chamber. When it was decided to have a consultation of eminent physicians, the King absolutely refused, and the Queen and Queen-mother had both to implore him to permit the visit of the doctors. When they entered, the royal patient again and again deprecated the alarm and the effect their visit would cause in the capital. Unceasingly King Alfonso requested that nothing should be done to alarm his people or damage the credit of Spain.

After the consultation he remarked: "But I must be worse when they do all this." He was not yet aware of the entire gravity of the situation, and at nightfall the Royal family took leave of him, apparently to return to Madrid, but they remained in the large ante-chamber close to his room, and there Queen Isabella, the Montpensiers, and the Infantas Isabella and Luísa, sisters of the King, passed the awful night waiting and praying, and doing their best to repress their audible sobs. Cardinal Benardides helped to console the Royal family. At 3 in the morning the King felt symptoms of suffocation, and asked Dr. Camison for some medicines to relieve him. Hypodermic injections were effected, and he dozed off quietly, with only Queen Christina leaning at the head of the bed. Dr. Camison and Duke Sexto sat a little apart, and all continued watching as the hours passed. At 5 another fit of suffocation came on and was again relieved.

The day broke gloomy and rainy, and as the other members of the Royal family entered the sick room the King seemed a little quieter, but sadly weaker. Dr. Camison went out, and as his Majesty had expressed a desire to see his children, orders were telegraphed for them to be sent down immediately. The physicians now no longer concealed from the Royal family that the end was fast approaching, and Cardinal Benardides entered the Royal alcove and prepared the King for the final rites of the Church. Alfonso confessed most devoutly, and received absolution amid dead silence, Queen Isabella, the Infantas, the Montpensiers, Duke Sexto, and other high officials kneeling, with tears coursing down their cheeks. It was an awful and impressive scene, and outside, in the palace ante-chambers and halls, sorrow and compassion were written on every face.

At forty-five minutes past eight the King, who had always lain on his left side, feebly turned on his right, breathing with much effort, and his head inclining toward the shoulder of Queen Christina, who thus, quite unawares, received the last breath of her husband. Dr. Camison and Riedel at once suspected the truth, felt the pulse of Don Alfonso, and called all the members of the Royal family to the alcove. When Queen Christina became aware of her bereavement, a wild cry of anguish burst from her lips. She shed no tears, but cried out: "Alfonso, my Alfonso! Oh God, he answers not; Alfonso!" Queen Isabella and both the Infantas sobbed outright, the Queen-mother falling on her knees and crying: "My son; my boy; Holy Virgin, have mercy!"

After the first burst of grief the Duke of Montpensier and his son took Queen Isabella and the Infantas away, but Queen Christina insisted on remaining, and with her own hands dressed and laid out the remains of her husband. She moved about like a marble figure in silent grief, and when all was finished she called for flowers and strewed the bed and the body with them, and then knelt a long while by his side until Cardinal Benardides, himself moved to tears, implored the Queen to go out and receive Senor Canovas and the Ministers, as it was her duty as Queen Regent to attend to State business.

A short time after he expired the Duchess de Medina Torres arrived with the little Princesses Maria de Las Mercedes, aged five, and Theresa, who is only three. They were taken to the bed where their father lay, the poor little ones stepping softly, as they had been told he was asleep. Suddenly the Princess of the Asturias asked: "If he is sleeping, why have they laid all these flowers?" "Because papa likes flowers, dear," replied the Duchess. "Hush, let us go softly, or we shall wake dear papa," said the little Princess, and they left the room to go to their mother, when another terrible scene of grief took place. All recollected how fond the King was of his children, often spending hours playing with them in the evening in Queen Christina's room, and of late, during his illness, he always wanted to see them.—London Standard's Madrid correspondence, Nov. 26.

A Venetian Romance.

A romantic story comes to us from Venice. A young Englishman appeared every morning in the tobacco divan of Signor Alberti, bought the most expensive cigars, gave presents to the beautiful shop girl, and, so far as his faulty command of the Italian tongue allowed, paid assiduous court to her. Subsequently he presented her with his visiting card, on which was engraved Lord Rodney. He told her that he was staying at the Grand Hotel, had hired the entire first stage, and was dying for love of her. He asked her to be his wife, but wished that the marriage should be performed secretly and immediately, because he feared that if his aristocratic kinsfolk in England gained any knowledge of his intentions, they would move heaven and earth to hinder the union. The young lady told the story to her employer, and Signor Alberti prudently enough went to the Grand Hotel, made inquiries, and found that all the servants spoke of the generosity and wealth of the English nobleman. He advised her to accept the splendid offer, and a day was fixed for the marriage. As the young lord did not turn up at the appointed time, Signor Alberti and the lady went to the hotel to find him. They found him in a white cravat cleaning his master's boots.

A Personal Reminiscence.

Through Mr. G. D. Gilman, of Boston, a former resident of these Islands, the Press is favored with the following interesting, though garbled, personal reminiscence relating to Hawaii nei, which has been corrected somewhat by him:

In the death of Mrs. Parnella Crane, aged ninety-two, Chicago has lost a most remarkable character. She was born at Truro, Mass., and at the age of fifteen married Mr. Charles Adams. Her husband was captain and part owner of the Ploughboy, a sailing vessel running between Boston and Baltimore. At the age of nineteen she was taken to Baltimore by her husband, and placed in care of an old family friend, while he was to make another trip to Boston and back. While on the way a terrible gale sprang up, during which the Ploughboy, with its captain and all hands, went to the bottom. Her sorrow moved her to seek a quieter abode, and the place selected for her was the residence of the mother of Cardinal McCloskey, who lived a retired life with her son. The Cardinal was then preparing for the priesthood. The two women became endeared to each other, and the young student, it is said, looked with favoring eyes upon the youthful widow. So far did he forget for the moment his theological prospect that he proposed for the hand of the widow in marriage. She, not being of the same faith, he intimated their difference in the matter of religion need be no bar, as in the event of her consent he would arrange that matter satisfactorily. "So," the old lady would say, "through my declaration of his proposal the Catholic Church gained one of its most notable dignitaries." She was a niece of Queen Fannie Young Kekelaokalani of the Sandwich Islands, Queen Fannie being the mother of Queen Emma, who died some years ago. Her uncle, John Young, was a seafaring man, and on one of his voyages the ship was wrecked and the crew made their way in boats to one of the islands. Knowing the man-eating tendencies of the inhabitants, Young hid himself in a hoghead that had floated ashore, and thus saved himself from the fate of his companions. He was discovered soon, however, and his discoverer became his future wife and the future Queen Fannie, etc.

NOTE.—In the Transcript of Nov. 11th there is a notice of Mrs. Parnella Crane, who recently died in Chicago, aged eighty-two.

It is stated "She was a niece of Queen Fannie Kekelaokalani of the Sandwich Islands, the mother of Queen Emma, who died some years ago. Her uncle, John Young, was a seafaring man, and in one of his voyages the ship was wrecked and the men made their way to the Islands. Knowing the man-eating tendencies of the inhabitants, Young hid himself in a hoghead, and was thus saved from the fate of his companions. He was soon discovered, however, and his discoverer became his future wife and the future Queen Fannie, etc."

Quite a pretty story; but John Young, an Englishman, was boatwain on board the American vessel Elmer, Captain Metcalf, who visited the Islands in 1793, and was not wrecked.

The then King, Kamehameha I., desirous of having a white man in his service, caused Young to be detained when he was on shore one day on duty. He was made a prisoner, but was most kindly treated, but kept secluded till after the vessel sailed. The Islanders were never "man-eaters," and no man was ever sacrificed or eaten. Young took a high chieftain to be his wife, who was a queen, neither was Fannie Kekela his daughter. Her daughter Emma was queen, being the wife of Alexander Liholiho, Kamehameha IV., who died a few months ago, a noble Christian woman. The facts can readily be ascertained by consulting the histories of the Islands of Jarvis, Dibble or Bingham. G. D. G.

Classical Profanity.

For persons who object to profanity in English, the following description of a quarrel in Latin, furnished by the Litchfield Enquirer, may suggest a substitute: "We now have two high schools in this village, beside the village district school, and it's getting to be as it was in ancient Rome when Cicero traveled its streets; the very boys quarrel in the Latin tongue. We happened along in front of the shoe-shop recently just in time to hear the consummation of a quarrel over a couple of quarts of chestnuts. And we heard one boy say 'You lie!' rather emphatically. That being pure English, we understood it perfectly. The other fellow returned fire something after this fashion, as near as we could catch on. 'I never stole your dum chestnuts, and I don't care-dum-nati fortem jubet jure juste dum item cus!' shaking his fist in the other youngster's face. Then a boy who stood looking on, with his hands thrust into his pockets up to his elbows, shouted, 'Sic et tuum dum h'm' which, not being able to understand, we suppose was also Latin. At this the youthful disputants pitched into each other, pulling hair and rolling in the dust at a great rate, while chestnuts flew in all directions in a manner that would have greatly alarmed the celebrated Virgil could he have been present. There's nothing like a classical education. We've often felt the want of it ourselves."

Fast War Vessels.

The Spanish Government has just contracted with a Scotch firm to build a man-of-war capable of making twenty-six miles an hour, and the British Admiralty has ordered a fleet of small gunboats guaranteed to steam nineteen knots an hour in rough weather. If the Spanish vessel comes up to expectation she will probably be the fastest in the world.

OF FRUGAL MIND.—Young man—Now we want to get spliced, and we haven't got much time. Tell me the best you can do as to time and money. Minister.—You astonish me, my dear sir. The wedding ceremony takes twenty minutes, and it will cost you $10. Young man.—Well, take half that time and I'll call it $5.—Rochester Post.

Customer.—Aren't you afraid to leave all these clothes hanging out on the sidewalk, with nobody to watch them? I should think you would be afraid somebody would steal them. Dealer.—Steal do clothes? Mein Him-mel, no! (Confidentially)—Vy, mein friend, I tell you, I sell do clothes so cheap, that id doesn't pay to steal them.—Somerville Journal.
